Violence module

 Broad experience on Victimization surveys, rooted in national practices

 A new attempt to conceptualise the main forms of violence and address new forms so to measure violence comprehensively and in a comparable manner

 For example, certain forms of violence remain often excluded from VS:

- psychological violence
- types of sexual violence
- Sexual /non sexual harassment

 As a result, few countries have data to report on the survey-based SDG indicators on violence

16.1.3 (a) Proportion of the population subject to physical violence

Access to Justice

 The two indicators provide important and complementary information about the overall accessibility to justice institutions

 One indicator focuses on resolution mechanisms when citizens experience various types of disputes

 Another indicator focuses on the experience of crime victims and whether they report to competent authorities, the first step for justice to make its course

 The survey modules account for different national mechanisms and institutions; they aim to provide comparable data on access to justice under different circumstances

Access to Justice

2015 - 2019

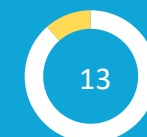

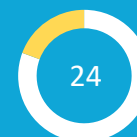

One data
point

Two data
points or more

16.3.3 Proportion of the population who have experienced a dispute in the past two years and who accessed a formal or informal dispute resolution mechanism, by type of mechanism

16.3.1 Proportion of victims of violence in the previous 12 months who reported their victimization to competent authorities or other officially recognized conflict resolution mechanisms

One data
point

Two data
points or more

General population surveys are the only way to obtain reliable data on the prevalence of bribery

Even with population surveys, there are a wide variety of questions used to measure the prevalence of bribery

Building on UNODC-UNDP Manual on Corruption Surveys, the module proposes a complete set of questions to obtain comparable results over time and across countries

TARGET

16.5

SUBSTANTIALLY
REDUCE CORRUPTION
AND BRIBERY

Trafficking in Persons

2015 - 2019

One data
point

Two data
points or more

Currently available data comes only from administrative records

The data includes only detected number of victims to trafficking which is only a fraction of the total number of victims

For the first time, the TIP module will provide a methodology to estimate undetected victims of trafficking and support countries in measuring 16.2.2 indicator
